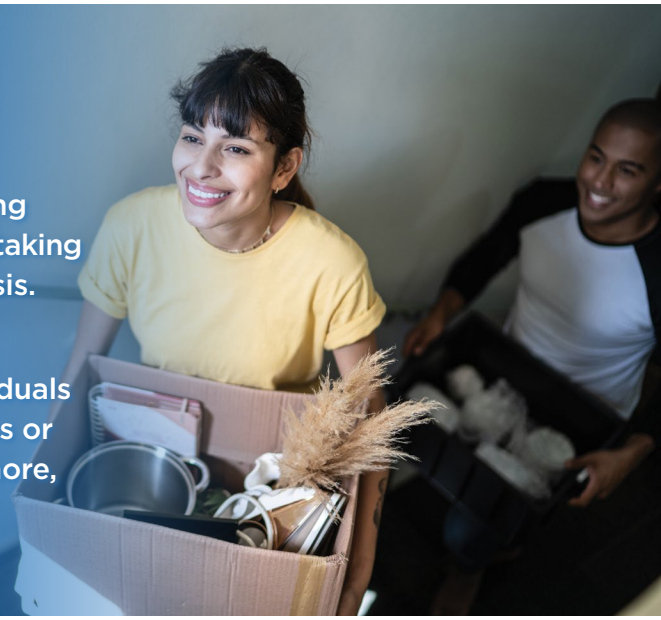
A Commitment to Building Stable Housing Solutions in California



Recognizing the fundamental connection between stable housing and overall health, California's Medi-Cal Managed Care Plans are taking decisive action to address the state's growing homelessness crisis.

Whether through direct contributions to the construction of affordable housing, to supporting organizations that help individuals and families receive assistance in navigating the housing process or funding housing services such as security deposits, and much more, Medi-Cal Managed Care Plans are working to create healthier, more resilient communities for all.

Medi-Cal Managed Care Plans are directly contributing to the development of affordable housing in California to get individuals and families into stable housing by:

- Collaborating with organizations that specialize in developing solutions for housing to ensure those in need receive assistance in navigating the housing process.
- Investing in solutions to address homelessness, through the Housing and Homelessness Incentive Program, such as the direct building and leasing of housing for those experiencing homelessness.
- Helping fund affordable housing projects throughout the state that assist low-income families, seniors, veterans, and individuals with disabilities to get into secure housing.
- Funding affordable housing communities that provide rental or down payment assistance, or even helping people who are housing insecure to build their own homes.
- Investing millions in California's Project Homekey, an $800 million California initiative, to create housing solutions for those who are housing insecure.
- Recognizing that nearly 30% of the 300,000 homeless youth in the U.S. live in California, Medi-Cal Managed Care Plans are partnering with organizations to offer housing stability for youth, which allows them to focus on education and well-being. This includes investments through Project Homekey, which have helped to create tiny home projects that provide college students with one year of permanent housing.
